Mrs. Matterhorn meanwhile had put on man's apparel, set the lamps to prevent surprise, and with the dog kept watch. Several rough-looking men stopped to look over the machine, and left only when the dog barked and tried to get at them.

She was discovered just before daylight by a milkman, and was in such a state of hysterical exhaustion that he stayed to care for her until the arrival of her hushand soon afterwards.

Matterhorn waked nine miles to Waterbury before he could get assistance.

Split Meteorite for Souvenire.

New York, Oct. 7.—Hundreds of souvenir hunters carried away pieces of the meteorie that workmen found imbedded in the heart of a vein of granite while blasting out a site for the new Democratic clubbouse in Anable street, near Jackson avenue, Long Island City. The samples were broken off with a sleige hummer.

Patrick Leaby, Deputy Collector of Taxes of Queens, who is an expert on mineralogy, and the meteorite had probably been buried for a million years. He said that it likely fell before the earth had cooled off, that it was soft when it fell and hardened after it worked a way into the granite.
